ELECTION 2015—WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW

Tuesday is Chicago's election for mayor, city clerk. treasurer and alderman of 50 wards in the city. Here's what you need to know:

- » If no one candidate in a race—from mayor to alderman—gets more than 50 percent of the vote on Feb. 24, then the Top 2 vote-getters will duke it out in a runoff election held April 7. The winner will take office and begin his or her four-year term May 18.
- » A few citywide non-binding referendum questions are on the ballot to gauge voter support or opposition on whether employers should be required to offer paid leave in the event of illness, domestic violence or an emergency school closing; whether workers who commit domestic violence should be required to receive treatment as a condition of continued employment; and whether Chicago or Illinois should seek a system of campaign finances that involve a mix of small, private contributions and public funding.
- » There will be no Election Day voter registration. If you're not registered by now, forget about casting a ballot. Registered voters can vote at their assigned polling place from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Tuesday. L.v.

WHAT NOT TO DO WHEN VOTING: TAKE A SELFIE

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

If you're tempted to take a selfie with your marked ballot Tuesday and show the world, via social media, whom you voted for, that's technically illegal.

While the state's election code doesn't explicitly address photography, there is a section on "unlawful observation of voting," said Ken Menzel, general counsel for the Illinois State Board of Elections. The law states that any person who "knowingly" marks his or her ballot so it can be observed by another person can be charged with a Class 4 felony, which is punishable by one to three years in prison.

Taking a photo of a marked ballot falls under that law, Menzel said. The law was created to undermine vote buying schemes, he said. It's illegal for anyone to promise, give or lend voters money or anything of value—even if it's gift cards, a beer or a carton of cigarettes — to vote, to register to vote or to even influence that voter so they cast a ballot in support or against a candidate. Whoever is attempting to buy the vote may want evidence such as a photo of the ballot to show how the voter voted. Prohibiting photos of ballots makes it more difficult to prove how someone cast their ballot if they are trying to sell their vote, he said.

State Rep. La Shawn Ford (D-Chicago) last month introduced a bill to the House that would allow voters to photograph their own ballots "at any time during the voting process" without consequences. But a person who gives, promises to give or gets any money in connection with disseminating the photo still would be committing a Class 4 felony.

"You don't want to deter young voters," Ford said. "Young voters are very excited about social media.

They're very excited about smartphones and excited about participating and showing they participated in certain things. Any time you rain on that parade, you're going to lose voters," he said.

He said he noticed voters taking photos as they cast ballots for President Obama and heard from people who said they didn't know they weren't allowed to take pictures of themselves celebrating that they voted for the

While he doesn't want people to sell votes, simply taking a photo of a ballot doesn't pose a threat or intend to harm anyone, Ford said.

Until the bill is passed, it's best to take the proud selfies with your ballot receipts outside of the polling place, election officials said.

Taking a photo without the marked ballot but inside the polling place can make other voters uncomfortable and can be disruptive, said Jim Allen, spokesman for the Chicago Board of Election Commissioners. The same thing with talking on your cellphone, he said.

If an election judge orders you to stop taking photos, you have to comply, as they're charged with keeping the polling place under control, Allen said. Otherwise, if you don't follow their order, you can be charged with a Class A misdemeanor, which is punishable by up to one

Bringing your smartphone into the polling place and using it in the voting booth as a reference guide in casting your ballot is fine, he said.

"You're performing a civic duty. You're voting. This isn't like going to the Hawks game. This isn't selfie time," Allen said.

BLURRED LANES EXPRESS BUS SYSTEM SET TO BREAK GROUND, BUT QUESTIONS REMAIN

Tracy Swartz

• @tracyswartz

After months of delays, the city will break ground next month on an express bus system in the Loop that is expected to reduce bus commute times and improve bus reliability, according to Mayor Emanuel's office.

With March only days away and on the eve of the mayoral election, mayoral spokesman Adam Collins and Chicago Department of Transportation spokesman Mike Claffey would not discuss the details of the S32.5 million express bus project, including how much of a headache this project will be for downtown commuters and which contractor would perform the work.

The express bus system, known as bus rapid transit, was supposed to be completed last year but was pushed beyond Tuesday's mayoral election so the city could finalize the design, CDOT Commissioner Rebekah Scheinfeld said last year. The project now is expected to be "substantially complete by the end of 2015, but some work will extend into 2016," Claffey said in an email.

As part of the project, the city will designate bus-only lanes on 2 miles of streets -Madison, Washington, Canal and Clinton streets; build eight new bus shelters alone Madison and Washington streets that are supposed to allow for easier boarding; and create "queue jumps" for buses so they can bypass other traffic at some intersections.

Other cities, including Cleveland and New York, have begun using bus rapid transit to speed up buses and encourage more people to ride public transit. Bus rapid transit, or BRT, is cheaper than extending rail lines and is more environmentally friendly if it encourages drivers to ditch their cars.

The changes should mean faster commutes for riders of the Nos. J14-Jeffery Jump, 20-Madison, 56-Milwaukee, 60-Blue Island/26th, 124-Navy Pier and 157-Streeterville/laylor routes as these buses move through downtown, the city said. Every weekday, more than 1,000 buses travel along the affected corridor, which is near Union Station and the Ogilvie Transportation Center, according to the city.

The changes are expected to save bus riders 7.5 minutes on trips a mile or less downtown. For downtown drivers, there will be fewer car lanes. For cyclists, there will be protected bike lanes on Washington, Randolph and Clinton streets.

The project will be paid for with a $24.6 million Federal Transit Administration grant and $7.3 million in local Tax Increment Financing, funds intended to spur development in certain neighborhoods.

This is not the first bus rapid transit project the city has stalled on. The city was slow to add early or extended green lights for No. J14 buses traveling between 73rd to 84th streets along Jeffery Boulevard, the city's first major foray into bus rapid transit. A controversial $160 million proposal to designate bus-only lanes on 16 miles of Ashland Avenue between Irving Park Road on the North Side and 95th Street on the South Side has gone nowhere.

In the Loop project, key details including who will perform the work still have yet to be announced. The city said in September that it would select a contractor by year's end. Claffey did not say which contractor has been selected.

Two companies, Capitol Cement and F.H. Paschen S.N. Nielsen and Associates, have bid for the work. Capitol Cement, a firm based on the Northwest Side that has done paving work for the city of Evanston, bid $31.8 million. F.H. Paschen, a Chicago construction company that also is slated to build the new Washington/Wabash station in the Loop, bid $35.8 million, according to the city's website.

Details about how commuters will be affected during construction and whether the work will bring bus and car reroutes are being finalized, Claffey said.

In the meantime, the city is wrapping up utility work in the area where the express bus system will be built. The city replaced water mains and did sewer and gas work, Claffey

At least one CTA bus rider is excited for the work to begin.

Gabrielle Davis, 24, said she regularly rides the No. J14 bus between 67th Street and downtown to run errands. Davis said her 30- to 45-minute trip becomes slower when taxis pull over in front of buses to pick up and drop off passengers.

Under the bus rapid transit system, taxis and cars would travel separately from buses, which Davis said she will appreciate.

"I would actually not mind my commute and I would be happier because it would be faster," said Davis, of South Shore.

DOWNTOWN TRANSIT IMPROVEMENTS

Chicago's $150 million investment in three downtown projects aims to improve access, speed and reliability for all modes of transportation. Construction for all three is expected to begin in the first quarter of 2015.

Sex assault charges tied to '50 Shades'

Chicago Tribune

A University of Illinois at Chicago student leader was charged with sexually assaulting a 19-year-old female student in what Cook County prosecutors said Monday was part of a re-enactment of scenes from the film "50 Shades of Grey."

Freshman Mohammad Hossain, 19, who his attorney said is studying bio-nuclear engineering, appeared shocked after a Cook County judge set his bail at $500,000, walking back to the lockup with his mouth wide open.

The judge was taken aback after Hossain's lawyer, assistant Cook County public defender Sandra Bennewitz, said Hossain had been involved with several UIC leadership programs, was a student ambassador to the alumni association and was on the triathlon team.

"Sandra, how can someone involved in all that let a movie persuade him to do something like this?" Judge Adam Bourgeois Jr. asked.

"He would say that it was consensual," Bennewitz replied.

Prosecutors said Hossain and the woman went to Hossain's dorm room at about 5:30 p.m. Saturday. The two had "previously been intimate" but were not dating, Assistant State's Attorney Sarah Karr said.

Once inside his dorm, in the 900 block of West Harrison Street, Hossain allegedly asked the woman to remove her clothing and she did, keeping on her bra and underwear, Karr said. He then bound her hands above her head and to a bed with a belt, used another belt to bind her legs and stuffed a necktie into her mouth, Karr said.

Hossain used a knit cap to cover the woman's eyes, Karr said, and removed the woman's bra and underwear. He then began striking the woman with a belt. After hitting her several times, the woman told Hossain he was hurting her, told him to stop, "and began shaking her head and crying," Karr said.

Hossain continued striking the womanincluding with his fists, according to an arrest report—and she managed to get one arm, and then another, free. But he then held her arms behind her back and sexually assaulted her as she continued to plead for him to stop, according to Karr.

Hossain's roommate came home soon after the assault and, prosecutors said, Hossain held the door shut to prevent him from entering. The woman then left and told another person what happened, then called police.

Police arrested Hossain later that night in another down building in the 700 block of South Halsted Street, according to an arrest report. He was interviewed by UIC detectives and, according to Karr, admitted assaulting the woman and "doing something wrong." He allegedly told police he and the woman were reenacting scenes from "50 Shades of Grey."

Rosemont paid country superstar Garth Brooks $1,050,000 to launch his comeback tour last year at Allstate Arena, records show, but officials say the village made twice that much. According to an agreement between the municipality and the singer's longtime promoter. Brooks received the money as a "rebate" for holding 11 kickoff shows at the arena. The disclosure ended the village's five-month legal battle to keep secret the financial details surrounding Brooks' record-breaking concert stand, which sold more than 183,500 tickets. TRIBUNE

Patrick Sharp

I know my daughter likes all the bobbleheads. I've collected them all since 2005. She plays with them all and calls them "Daddy's hockey friends." There's about 10 Kane and Toews bobbleheads, different ones. There's a couple Sharps. There's a lot of Hossas, there's a Coach Q in there, Savvy [Denis Savard], all the old guys. So it's pretty special to have those bobbleheads I guess.

They always try to have one [defining] characteristic. One year I had big, Patrick Swayze-type hair. I don't know if that was a compliment or not. They try to get the skin tone down. Sometimes I got a better tan than other years. I like the one year the one [for] Kaner, they had his little white mouthguard out the side of his mouth. That was a cool feature.

Andrew Shaw

[Mine] was gorgeous. It was a good-looking bobblehead. Everyone is going to be putting it at the front of their bobbleheads for sure. They won't be sticking it in the back anywhere.

Seabs [Brent Seabrook] gave me a hard time about having one. [He said,] "Oh, you've been here for a cup of tea and you already got a bobblehead." Guys just give each other hard times about it. Guys have said to Toews and Kane, "Oh is this your 14th or 15th bobblehead already?" Just friendly chirps going around the dressing room.

It's huge that the organization does that for people. I think it was pretty neat. To see yourself as a bobblehead, it's pretty funny I guess.

Marian Hossa

Definitely it's nice to see the little guy moving the head. I think kids are really happy when they receive it.

[RedEye pointed out that the bobbleheads seem to be lucky for players.] You're right. But [players] don't think about these things [on the ice]. Obviously when it happens, it's great. But like I said, it's a cool thing to have, but when the puck drops you don't even think about it.

Brandon Saad

It's definitely pretty neat, to see that and collect and give it to friends and family. It's definitely a moment you'll remember.

I don't remember too much [about the day mine was passed out]. I don't know how much it actually looked like me. It's pretty funny. It's kind of like your night out there, so I think they'll definitely be some jokes around. SCOTT KING IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. @SCOTTKINGMEDIA

RAISE YOUR

By Heather Schroering | REDEYE

Are you ready to get shaking? After weeks of competition, the final stage of Best Bartender 2015 is finally here. We're putting our four finalists—Tommy Lansaw from Wood, Dan Rook from South Water Kitchen, Dianna Sanders from The Promontory and Manny Sofios from RPM Steak and Slippery Slope—behind the bar Tuesday night to see who earns the title of RedEye's Best Bartender 2015.

Doors open at 6 p.m. at Untitled (III W. Kinzie St.) and the four finalists will start serving samples of their signature cocktails at 6:30 p.m. At press time, tickets were nearly sold out, but you can find details and cast your final vote online at redeyechicago.com/bartender.

In honor of the big bash, we checked in with some of our past Best Bartender participants from the past 11 contests. Some still are bartending, some have moved around in the industry, some are parents and one is the reigning World's Best Bartender. Here are a few of their status updates. HSCHROERING@REDEYECHICAGO.COM | @REDEYEEATDRINK

CHARLES JOLY 2004 CONTENDER

Then: Bartender at the now-shuttered Cans in Bucktown

Now: Joly left his post as beverage director for The Aviary last October and has been working on several projects and tending bars all over the world, from the Grammys to the Cayman Cookout in the Cayman Islands. He recently was announced a semifinalist for the James Beard Foundation Restaurant and Chef awards, which will be held in Chicago at the Lyric Opera in May, for Crafthouse Cocktails, his retail brand that he's working on expanding throughout the country (look for it at Whole Foods, Binny's and Mariano's).

JOHN KINDER 2005 FINALIST

Then: Bartender at Moxie

Now: After four years of jumping around from Moxie to Pump Room and a few other bars that since have closed, John "successfully transitioned from one side of the bar to the other" when in 2009 he joined Death's Door Spirits, where he's the national brand manager, "which means I look at a lot of spreadsheets now."

JOHNNY "COCKTAIL" VITHOULKAS

Then: Bartender at Spybar in River North

Now: It's been nine years since Johnny "Cocktail" took the title for Best Bartender for his cappuccino shot, and he's still right where we left him at Spybar. He's been there for nearly 13 years, and his famous shot hasn't retired yet either. "They still love the cappuccino shot," he said. He hopes to open up his own bar, Johnny Cocktail's, in the future.

Then: Bartender at the former Elm Street Liquors

Now: Frog hung up her bottle-opener belt buckle last September to focus on her small businesses, clothing label and boutique House of Frog (2745 S. Princeton Ave.) and homemade kombucha line Frog Juice. "I am still working closely within the industry as both a supplier and collaborator on cocktail pairings with my kombucha," she said.

JENNIFER CONTRAVEOS 2007 FINALIST

Then: Bartender at Bon V

Now: Jennifer works as a training manager at Bacardi USA and also continues to run her own beverage consulting company, The Crafted Cocktail, which she founded seven years ago.

DANI HOYLER 2008 WINNER

Then: Bartender at Sheffield's

Now: You'll find Dani at Three Floyds Brewing Company, where she is currently the director of sales, which she said "is a pretty [bleeping] metal job." She oversees events, sales and marketing, currently ramping up for the Dark Lord Day beer festival at Three Floyds in April. "So, I've been having a pretty good time since I won."

TONY POTEMPA 2009 FINALIST

Then: Bartender at Roof

Now: Tony is head bartender for Miss Ricky's, a soon-to-open diner in the Loop's new Virgin

SARAH BUSEN 2009 FINALIST

THE QUOTE

I'm trying to get it finished. I'm trying to get it to the people. ... Release dates is played out. So the surprise is going to be a surprise. There go the surprise."

—Kanye West, to L.A.'s Power 105.1, on his next album, which he says is "80 percent done." We could not tell you whether that 80 percent includes Taylor Swift. Not because it's a secret. We just have no idea.

The Col-beard report

Look, we're still recovering from the Oscars, OK? Anyway, some sleuthing has revealed at least one thing Stephen Colbert is doing with his bushy new beard—guest-starring on "The Mindy Project." Mindy Kaling herself tweeted a pic posing with Father Michael O'Donnell, aka Colbert as a Catholic priest. The most surprising part of all of this might be just how gray Colbert is under the nose.

And le winner is ...

Kristen Stewart! The scowly star on Friday became the first American actress to win a Cesar—that's France's version of the Oscars, not the canned dog food. She picked up Best Supporting Actress for her role in "Clouds of Sils Maria," which also starred Juliette Binoche and Chloe Grace Moretz. "The reasons why people make films here in France are very different from the reasons why people make movies in Hollywood and I prefer it here a little bit," she told Variety backstage. France really, really likes you!

Man down

Looks like Piper (Taylor Schilling) won't be pining over Larry (Jason Biggs) in the next season of "Orange Is the New Black." Biggs told the New York Daily News that his character isn't appearing in the show's upcoming third season, which premieres on Netflix in June. "They're not focusing on Larry at the moment," he said. "But there's always a possibility he can come back." Please tell us Biggs isn't working on ANOTHER "American Pie."
